This score may not be altered or reproduced in any manner without permission.

Two pieces, Dai Sanya and Walking Meditation (Komuso Nagati), are original arrangements of traditional Honkyoku. Although that entitles me to a full copyright of my arrangement, I am deeply indebted to the Honkyoku tradition, to my teacher Grandmaster Michael Chikuzen Gould, to his teachers, and their teachers... As such you may perform these two scores under the condition that you name the piece and state that it was arranged by Ron Bracale. You may record these two pieces under the condition that you name the piece and state that it was arranged by Ron Bracale and provide me with a copy.

The other five original pieces, Dreamer, Winter Sunshine, Kyorei Yori, Thunder beings, and Gentle Touch are bound by all standard copyright laws. Please enjoy playing them and teaching them, but attain Mechanical Rights for recordings. I am easy to work with and happy to make special arrangements, just contact me.

Notes:

- These scores represent a roadmap to the pieces and every player should approach them with their own unique style and the energy of the present situations. Extra coils and nayashi are to be expected.
- The breath marks are generally lines across the column. The short ones to the right are optional and are either a quick breath or a slight pause. The thick Box-like breath marks are sections and any section can be repeated or one can move from any section to any other section, though occasionally other points of repeat may exist.
- The first breath of Winter Sunshine has a symbol for static, meaning breathy and windy. I use the infinity symbol for BoKo (typically bounce 3 and pop 4) and an upside down 'T' for Kidu (cut or end abruptly).
